ironically, Andrew has used the term "glittering generalities" referring to the Admin in the past. Well Kurt held his feet to the fire and made him explain the points Andrew has used for almost a year. Two points:

1. Andrew said he's heard from DC that there are other projects that the feds could push along, that didn't take the kind of support ours may from the Feds. Kurt asked if Andrew knew which projects were on the federal radar to move forwards. Andrew said he's heard of 9 other locations to get energy, so when pressed where they were, Andre started to stumble. He said "well maybe Colorado", to which Kurt replied "Colorado is very sensitive environmentally right now, so what are the others?". Andrew didn't have much so Kurt said, "okay, so you just throw things out there and don't back them up with facts. I see how it works, okay."

2. Andrew talked about how TC was probably lobbying the halls of congress for loan guarantees or bridge guarantees, and asked how this fit in the framework of AGIA. Kurt explained that they are a large company that moves over 15B of gas a day, and they're going to look at all options out there, but that this in no way was a contingency that the project rested on. Andrew had no credible comeback.

He also answered the piece about bullet line/in state use saying that this Governor's focus was moving this project forward for Alaskans to get AK's gas to market, and AGIA is the path to accomplish exactly that.

He was cool, succinct, credible, and honestly talked over Andrew's head, which is something that doesn't happen often enough.

I don't think I have EVER heard someone stump and put Andrew on the defense like is happening right now on Andrew's show.

Point after point after point, Andrew is flailing. For once there is someone in the room smarter than Andrew.

Yes - the update on the King Air is that it will not be available until Wed. We have all commercial flights through Mon. That are listed on your calendar. Hope Todd is feeling well after yesterday - Janice Just fyi- we ended up with one too many rooms because the rollaway can fit into the second room- so I cancelled the one.

And again to confirm we're not looking at the king air for tomorrow, don't know it's status for Monday's return to Juneau but assume that will be commercial also?
